

Expecting a Baby?

Congratulations! Expecting a new baby is an awesome and slightly terrifying experience. On top of everything else you are doing to prepare for your baby's arrival, now you have to select a pediatrician. How do you select a doctor for your precious baby who you haven't even met yet? The good news for expecting parents in Richmond is that pediatric offices are plentiful.

At Pediatric Partners of Virginia, we recommend taking some time to think about what you are looking for in a pediatrician and in a pediatric medical practice. Are you looking a relationship with your pediatrician? Does it matter to you if your pediatrician knows your child? Do you have a job with the flexibility to allow you come to the pediatrician's office during the day? If the answer to some of these questions is no, then one of the larger groups in town may offer more flexibility with late night office hours and walk-in visits.

But if the answer is yes, we recommend reading the pediatrician biographies and scheduling a free pre-natal consult where you can come to the office and meet some of our staff and the pediatrician you are considering. It is a great opportunity for expecting parents to interact and ask questions with one of our pediatricians one-on-one before deciding if a Pediatric Partners of Virginia practice is the right practice for your family.

We want you to feel like you are making the best choice when you choose one of our pediatricians to care for your baby. Please call one of our practices to schedule a free pre-natal consult with a pediatrician. All contact information is located on our website, ppvkids.com.
